Labor and Workforce Development Agency Announces Workforce Navigator Program for English Language Learners

$2.5 million awarded to local workforce boards to provide career services and support to immigrant workers

SACRAMENTO – The California Labor and Workforce Development Agency today announced its workforce navigator pilot program to help English language learners and immigrant workers with career services and support that lead to jobs. The agency and the California Workforce Development Board awarded $2.5 million to five local workforce boards to implement the new case management program that brings together job training, adult education and support services for individuals with limited English-language proficiency.

More than one-third of California’s workforce are immigrants. This population faces cultural, language and other barriers that limit access and opportunities to complete job training programs. The navigator program will provide case management and referrals to support services that will help immigrants and those with language barriers receive the education and skills training needed for income mobility.

“Immigrants will play a key role in California’s labor force for decades, and this new program will address the language, education and skills needs of our current and future workforce,” said Labor and Workforce Development Agency Secretary David M. Lanier. “These grants will support the upward mobility of immigrant families who are critical to our economy.”

The projects funded will better align adult education and employment training programs by promoting collaboration. Adult education programs have traditionally been the entry point for immigrants for English-language skills. The navigator role is to serve as a career coach and case manager that can ensure participants are on an education or job training path, and have the support to overcome barriers that can include child care, transportation, housing and health care. This assistance brings together workforce training services and adult education to create programs that are more accessible to English language learners and immigrants.
